

453

On death of ATTLA the Huns
the Ostrogoths settled in PANNONIA (roughly modern Hungary) which they received as allies of the East Roman Empire

453

ATTILA the Hun died of overindulgence at his wedding feast.
He was about 47.

453-466

Theodoric (II) was the third Touloosan king of the Visigoths.
He made the treaty with Rome effective.

466
453

13

He was grandson of ALARIC I
His father was THEODERID
(= Theodoric I)

406-453

Attila the Hun was born in 406 & died in 453

453

Vernal Equinox was
mar. 20.

453

Alta died

Altta died from a nosebleed (we are told) while celebrating his marriage to a new, younger wife.

Altta left no strong leader to replace him and the House quickly disappeared from the pages of history.

The Ostrogoths had played a fleeting role. They had fallen under the sway of Attila (the Hun). But on Attila's death in 453, they recovered their independence.

They had been admitted to settle within the borders of the Empire, en masse, in Moesia. The Amals, god-descended, still reigned among the ordinary. At the time their was the youthful but already formed man, Theodore the Adept. To him was turned for aid in the suppression of Theodore's spirit, the old for young work promoted the young men that their worth with, not fight or, other, so zero & Theodore came to him. Theodore was made master of the school & secured fresh gifts of land for his order.

453 died

Attila the Hun died 453 A.D.

He was ruler of the nomadic Huns.
Harassed the eastern half of the Roman Empire during the 440's and devastated much of the western half of the empire in 451-452. He was known as the "scourge of God."

453

Aetila dies. Theodoric II
king of the Visigoths

453-466

1912 Dates J-BK

Vesigottas

Theodoric II was king.

453

Attila died in 453 and his great empire disappeared completely and his people found their way back to Asia.

453AD

ATTILA died

453-466

THEODORIC II King of the Visigoths